“Paul’s TheoRhetoric: Interpretive Politics in Law and Religion”

A talk by

Professor Steven Mailloux

Department of English and Comparative Literature, UCI
President’s Professor of Rhetoric, Loyola Marymount University

Once again using rhetoric to practice theory by doing history, Professor Mailloux will illustrate the religious turn in recent critical cultural studies by examining the problem of interpretive politics in two historical receptions of St. Paul: the 1882 Senate debates over the Chinese Exclusion Act and Supreme Court Justice Scalia's 2002 statement on capital punishment and the U.S. Constitution.

Friday, February 26
1:00pm - 3:30pm
Humanities Gateway 1010

Light refreshments will be served.

The English Graduate Colloquium series seeks to develop intellectual community and professional solidarity by providing a forum for faculty to share recent work with graduate students and respond to current questions about professionalization.
