Dictation and Variations

Though a dictation activity can be based on familiar material, it is best to use some recombination or novel approach to that material so that students are stimulated to use both their listening and writing skills. Dictated passages of at least a paragraph in length are best, since this presents language in a discourse-length context. Partial dictations or variations on dictation should also be contextualized.