In this presentation, I outline the recent history of anti-sexual violence activism and the growth of transnational trans-exclusive radical feminism in South Korea. The variability of activist routes has caused tension between feminists across organizational generational lines, furthered by the rapid growth of online activist spaces and their ideologies. In this talk, I argue that there was never a true “sisterhood” among feminists, and that online feminist radical activism (both feminists allied with all queer people and transphobic feminists) makes this statement tangible. This talk uses ethnographic fieldwork in South Korea (2018–2019) and is an excerpt from my dissertation, Feminist Assemblages: Feminist Activism and Communities in Contemporary South Korea.

Free and open to the public.
